

When doctors told Michael and Maria McQuay that their son with autism would never be self-sufficient, the pair responded by seeking out a series of therapies and programs for him. After discovering there was a dearth of suitable public services, they formed their own swim team for children with developmental disabilities.

Lara Stolman's inspiring debut documentary, Swim Team, follows three diverse young men – Michael McQuay Jr., Robert Justino and Kelvin Truong – from Perth Amboy, New Jersey, who fall on the autism spectrum. On the McQuays' team, the Jersey Hammerheads, these young men find inclusion, independence and space to achieve their loftiest goals.
